This product represents a unique and dynamic organizational schema and interface. Highlighted below are the following features and benefits: Creates and saves nested set structures without code. All that is needed is a simple drag and drop interface for creating and modifying entities such as parent, child, child list, child ID, and child path. The properties tab displays exactly what attributes will be used as primary keys in the database. Simplifies the database of cardinality - the ability to exactly say how many children will be in a given parent. The Hierarchical Set Properties dialog can be used to indicate whether the data that was originally represented in the nested set structure will be used for the primary key. Associates can use the HTML form to specify data, such as using a drop-down box or an image selector. And much more. With set properties, all editing is done with the hierarchy data itself. Its set properties dialog is used to enter data directly about the type of hierarchy; the actual data itself is entered on the attribute tab of the dialog. IMES409 Piping: The act of moving data from one process to another, where the input of one process feeds the output of another process. A pipelined processor is controlled by a set of registers. Pipelining involves the use of registers and buffers to remove large segments of instruction sequence and data from sequential execution of a given set of instructions. Pipelining allows significantly higher performance than if each instruction were sequentially processed. This video is about Understanding the concepts of pipelining in computers and start following along immediately with the tutorials. Simulating a computer with wires or tubes is called hardware design, whereas software is the programming that runs the hardware. This process is called simulation as it models what the computer would do in real life if its physical wiring was on a piece of paper. Computer simulation is similar to the study of a real-life object such as a car. High-performance Pipelining Pipelining is a technique of hardware design in which the steps of a pipeline are subdivided and parallelized so as to allow data to be processed in a hardware component.
